Family Partnership Training is based on the Family Partnership model developed by the UK's Professor Hilton Davis to assist professionals in health, welfare and education in their work with parents.

The Family Partnership model is widely used in the United Kingdom and has been embraced by early childhood services throughout Australia. (www.cpcs.org.uk)

"Each helper is different, each family is unique. The interactions between them are rarely routinely predictable. Nevertheless, we hope that each helper will come to realize the enormous influence they have as a person, and strive to harness the power of their own personality for the benefit of the families they serve"

Excerpt from "Working in Partnership with Parents: The Parent Adviser Model"
Hilton Davis, Crispin Day & Christine Bidmead

Would you like to engage with families more effectively?
Do you want to enhance parenting skills and confidence?
Are you ready to be professionally and personally challenged?

Family Partnership Training will offer you a systematic and evidence-based method to improve your skills, confidence and expertise in working with parents and children.

Family Partnership Training will help you :

- Successfully engage with families
- Feel more confident and competent in relating to parents
- Increase your understanding of the helping processes
- Build the qualities and skills needed to be a helper
- Enhance parents' skills and confidence in raising children
- Support the development and well-being of children

Skilled facilitators will work with participants to challenge existing helping strategies and to collectively explore new approaches.

Training is interactive throughout and takes into account the skills and expertise of the group. Participants are given opportunities throughout the course to practice the skills of engaging parents.
